Course Overview

Autism Spectrum Disorder: Therapeutic Programs and Strategies for SLPs

This comprehensive online course is designed to equip speech-language pathologists with the knowledge and practical tools needed to support individuals with Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) across different age groups. Grounded in evidence-based practice, the course explores communication challenges in autism, developmental considerations, and a range of intervention approaches including play-based therapy, naturalistic interventions, AAC, and social communication strategies.

Participants will learn how to tailor treatment to a client's developmental stage and communication profile, work collaboratively with families and teams, and design individualized therapy plans. Case studies, guided planning, and role-play scenarios will be used throughout to support real-world application and clinical reflection.

Course Objectives

- Identify core communication characteristics of autism across different developmental stages.
- Select and apply evidence-based treatment approaches suited to individual profiles and contexts.
- Design developmentally appropriate and functional communication goals for children and adolescents with autism.
- Implement strategies for enhancing engagement, joint attention, AAC use, and social communication.
- Collaborate effectively with families and educational teams in treatment planning and delivery.

Target Audience

Speech-language
pathologists

Graduate students in speech-language therapy

Clinical supervisors and educators in communication disorders

SLPs working in early intervention, schools, clinics, or multidisciplinary teams

About the Trainer

Dr. Safa is an experienced clinician in pediatric speech and language therapy, with a strong focus on early intervention, behavioral support, and school-based programs. She is certified in several evidence-based approaches, including NDP3, DTTC, PCIT (UK), CBT, and the Lidcombe Program, and is also a certified Portage assessor. Her clinical expertise lies in supporting children with complex communication and developmental needs.
